Traditions of Hope

Milestone anniversaries reflect rich heritage

On the Cover

Multiple anniversaries are reflected in the collage on page one as Hope commemorates the 100th anniversary of chemistry and physics; the 100th anniversary of football; and the 175th and 100th anniversaries of the Fraternal Society and Knickerbocker fraternity. Most of the images are self-explanatory, but the Fraternal shot from the early 1900s on the lower right of the page merits a note. The assembled group includes longtime faculty member J.B. Nykerk 1885 (second row, fourth from left); college president Gerrit Kollen 1868 (second row, third from right); and well-known peace activist A.J. Muste 1905 (front row, fourth from right).

"Quote, unquote"

Quote, unquote is an eclectic sampling of things said at and about Hope College.

This issue of News from Hope College highlights tradition—academic, social and athletic—with stories occasioned by the anniversaries of the departments of chemistry and physics; the Fraternal Society and Knickerbocker Fraternity; and football. While it's not an anniversary story, this issue's preview of the restoration of Graves Hall fits equally well as a celebration of heritage.

The following remarks reach back to the earliest days of Graves Library and Winants Chapel, during the ceremony for the laying of the cornerstone on October 12, 1892. The address was by Edwin F. Uhl, former mayor of Grand Rapids, Mich., and soon to be assistant and later acting U.S. secretary of state and ambassador to Germany, who expressed hope that the building would endure; rejoiced in its role as a center of learning; and praised those whose generosity made it possible.

We believe that Uhl and the others present on that "beautiful autumnal day" (as the Anchor reported) would be pleased to know that the building did indeed go on to serve for generations, and that the generosity of alumni and friends in the 21st century will help it to do so for many more.

"The occasion is one of great interest, not only to those immediately connected with the College itself, not only to the city within whose municipal bounds the building about to be erected shall stand, an ornament for many generations—God grant! But to the entire common-wealth whose brightest jewel in the diamond of her many excellences is her educational system..."

"You are today indeed engaged in a noble and philanthropic effort whose silent and beneficent influence will reach to remote generations yet to come. The structure itself which shall be built upon this foundation, thro the benefactions of the friends of this College and of learning, will long stand as a monument to the taste and the intelligence of its builders. In its beauty of design, in its grace of architecture, in its harmony of proportion, in its adaptability to the uses for which it is reared, it will be a mute but eloquent witness to the wise thought, the elevated sentiment, the ripe culture and the high purpose of those who conceived, designed and built it; and all who shall at any time hereafter feel the beneficent touch of its influence, will thereby be more richly endowed with mental acquirements..."

"All who are here today will ere long, having finished their course in the school of time, be called to enter the great university of the future; but in the Graves Library, whose corner stone you have just placed in position, countless scholars in the ages which are to follow will find inspiration, profit and delight; will find in the books upon its shelves, companions and friends, solace in grief, quickened pleasure in prosperity. Here they will cultivate and stimulate the love of books, here they will heighten the delights of literature, here they will seek the companionship of the wisest and most gifted of the race and learn of the greatest instructors from every age of the world's history..."

"And so whoever shall contribute aught to this building which shall rise above this stone, whether it be from the abundance of the opulent, or whether it be the widow's mite, even if it be a cup of cold water to some builder here engaged, shall lay up in the gratitude of its beneficiaries, a treasure which neither moth nor rust shall corrupt, for it shall be enduring."✍

GRADUATION RATE:

The college's graduation rate ranks among the best in Michigan, according to the American Enterprise Institute for Public Policy Research in the report Diplomas and Dropouts:

Which Colleges Actually Graduate Their Students (and Which Don't.)"

Hope and Kalamazoo College shared the top spot among baccalaureate colleges in Michigan with a graduation rate of 78 percent. The highest graduation rate among all colleges and universities in Michigan was the University of Michigan at 88 percent. The average graduation rate for all colleges and universities in Michigan was 52 percent.

The rate is determined by the number of first-time students who graduate within six years of enrollment. The study is based on 2001 enrollees and 2007 graduates.

FLOOD WATCH: The Hope campus spent weeks recovering after a June rainstorm of historic intensity caused flood damage throughout the Holland area.

A violent storm that hit at about 8 p.m. on Friday, June 19, dumped some seven inches of rain in just a few hours, washing out numerous roads, uprooting trees and inundating the lower levels of buildings communitywide. The storm even made the national news.

Hope sustained more than one million in damages (covered by insurance), with the effects particularly severe at the DeWitt Tennis Center, Schaap Science Center, De Pree Art Center and Hope-Geneva Bookstore.

Upon the Shoulders of Giants

By Greg Olgers '87

From little acorns, mighty science programs grow.

Facing each other across Van Andel Plaza, the A. Paul Schaap Science Center and VanderWerf Hall define the western edge of campus just as they host a defining part of the Hope experience for hundreds of students each year.

Home to the natural and applied sciences as well as the department of psychology, the two buildings reflect and support a program and teaching model that is acclaimed nationally and for decades has produced graduates who have in turn made a profound difference in the sciences themselves as researchers, teachers and physicians.

It happens, though, that the grand, brick-and-mortar buildings are descendents of far humbler stock. Their lineage traces back to a 10-year-old wooden storehouse, built just one decade after Holland was carved from the wilderness, that was converted into the college's first classroom laboratory in 1867.

Dedicated in 1903, Van Raalte Hall was the first building at Hope constructed specifically with science education in mind. The tradition of providing facilities that well support learning continues—and was realized most recently with the opening of the Schaap Science Center in 2003.

It is from such simple origins that began the trajectory that led to today's tradition of excellence. The success is a tribute to skilled nurturing and innovation by faculty mentors with a deep commitment to the students in their care.

The tale is being celebrated during the coming school year in conjunction with a centennial: the creation of the departments of chemistry and physics as independent programs in 1909. The germination of the modest seed that was planted in the 1860s, the century-ago milestone is being heralded as the beginning of the growth and flowering that continue to the present.

To provide an enduring chronicle, the division is producing the coffee-table book A Century of Science: Excellence at Hope College, which will be available by the beginning of the school year and tells the story of all the science programs, not only chemistry and physics but also biology, computer science, engineering, the geological and environmental sciences, mathematics and nursing. Highlights of the academic-year commemoration will also include a series of invited addresses by alumni of the departments.

"We're using the 100-year anniversary as an impetus to look at the entire program in the sciences," said Dr. Graham Peaslee, who is helping to coordinate the celebration and is a professor of chemistry and chairperson of the department as well as a professor of geology/environmental science. "We want to make sure it's not just a celebration of chemistry or a celebration of physics."

The college's national reputation in the natural and applied sciences is built on the dedication of generations of outstanding faculty. Chemist Dr. Gerrit Van Zyl '18 pioneered the model of involving students in research, a practice that now reaches institution-wide. He is shown in the 1940s in Lubbers Hall, then the science building, with George Zuidema '49 and Eugene van Tamelen '47. (All images these pages from the Hope College Collection of the Joint Archives of Holland)

The book is being edited and designed by award-winning local author Valerie Van Heest, whose extensive bibliography includes numerous books, articles and videos focused on history, Great Lakes shipwrecks in particular.

Lavishly illustrated, the volume traces the eras of Hope science by facility—from that anonymous wooden lab, to the basement of Van Vleck Hall, to Van Raalte, Lubbers, VanderWerf, Peale and Schaap. The text draws heavily on the work of Dr. Irwin Brink '52, who taught chemistry from 1957 until retiring in 1996 and had previously written a history of science at the college for the Legacies campaign from which the Schaap Science Center grew.

Additional sources include a history of the department of mathematics by Dr. Jay Folkert '39, who taught at Hope from 1946 until retiring in 1982, and a history of geology by department founder Dr. J. Cotter Tharin, who taught from 1967 until retiring in 1996. An article about the founding and early years of Holland by local historian Paul Trap, reprinted from Michigan History Magazine, serves as an introduction, putting the college and program into context. Current faculty are also writing about their programs and the future of science at Hope, with a foreword by Dr. Moses Lee, the division's dean. An appendix will list all who have taught in the sciences.

The buildings help frame the story, but the book is really about the difference made by the dedicated professors whose work Hope's facilities support. The first science instruction was by a theologian, the Rev. Cornelius Crispell, who was one of the college's original five professors and was appointed to teach mathematics, natural philosophy and astronomy, but Hope soon began hiring specialists. The first faculty research space, in Van Raalte Hall (1903), was developed by biologist Samuel Mast—whose lasting impact on the campus also included designing Voorhees Hall. Today's signature practice of involving students in research as a teaching tool, and obtaining outside funding to support it, was developed by chemist Dr. Gerrit Van Zyl '18, who taught at Hope from 1923 to 1964.

Dr. Brink's account, of course, was informed by his experience of Dr. Van Zyl as both one of his faculty mentors and, ultimately, a colleague.

"Van Zyl was a true chemist. He liked to delve into his own projects," Dr. Brink said. "Out of that came this summer research pathway that he blazed here at Hope long before it became popular. Van Zyl pioneered it. He was doing it before anyone else."

Van Heest's role has included not only collecting and synthesizing the work of others, but conducting hours of additional research herself, much of it at the Joint Archives of Holland. It's a process that has itself led to new connections, such as when she found herself looking through a batch of carefully organized portraits of young graduates from a century before—images that were more a part of the story than was first apparent.

"As I started to review what Irwin Brink had written about the chemistry department, he talked about Professor Almon Godfrey and how he had a habit of putting photographs of the graduates on the wall of his office and would track their progress," she said. "I realized, These are his photographs."

A member of the faculty beginning in 1904, Dr. Godfrey died in 1923. The images that he displayed with such pride some 86 years ago to show the lives that his students were leading will now help show the richness of the college's tradition in the sciences.

It's a tradition that Van Heest has grown to appreciate, discovering through her work a gem that she hadn't previously had an opportunity to experience.

"Here in our small town of Holland, here in our small liberal arts college, we have a world-class science program," she said. "I didn't suspect that of small-town Holland. The amazing science department has me thinking that I'm going to introduce my small children to Moses Lee." 🐦

Access to cutting-edge instrumentation provides Hope students with opportunities available to few undergraduates elsewhere. In an image likely from the latter 1970s, Dr. Peter Jolivet of the physics faculty works in the ortec scattering chamber attached to the college's Van de Graaff accelerator, a landmark instrument in its day. Its successor is the Pelletron particle accelerator and attached microprobe facility installed in 2004, equipment available at only a few dozen institutions of any sort worldwide.

Learning in Three Dimensions

By Nicole Brace '07

Two years ago, John Donkersloot '11 came to Hope College looking for a place that would allow him to pursue an education in his own way, as a “three-dimensional person” committed to academics, athletics, and the arts.

Given the large dimensions of his life, that desire is proving to be a tall—and exciting—order to fill. He is finding Hope the ideal fit for his varied interests, all the more because the Zeeland, Mich., native searched thoroughly before choosing a school that happened to be close to home.

As he began his senior year of high school, Donkersloot found that Division I and NAIA schools wanted the 6'7", all-state high jumper—to join their track and field programs. And while he knew he wanted to compete, Donkersloot didn't know where to do so. As an accomplished pianist, he wondered how much time he could devote to his music if he participated in a Division I athletic program. Academically, he was becoming interested in medicine, but not enough to determine his choice. He had applied to nearby Hope more as a measure of prudence and to honor family ties—his grandmother (Elaine Meeusen '47 Donkersloot) and father (Jim Donkersloot '76) are alumni, and his brother (Steve Donkersloot '10) was already a student—but Donkersloot had never actually imagined attending Hope himself.

In the end, Donkersloot was resolved—or nearly so—to head out of state on a track scholarship. As the deadline approached, however, he became less sure, and the night before Hope's deposit was due, he spent four hours deep in thought. When he emerged from his room, he told his father, “I think I'm going to Hope,” and the next day drove to Holland, delivering the deposit during his lunch period.

It was a good choice. Once enrolled, he took a number of science classes required for the pre-med program, including one in general chemistry. Realizing that he enjoyed it, he took more courses and applied to conduct summer research with Dr. Mike Pikaart in the department of chemistry. The passion he discovered for research, the rapport he found with faculty, and his growing interest in chemistry all led to his current academic track.

Now, in the summer after his sophomore year, Donkersloot is studying the behavior of “Research is great. It's logical—you can look at your results and make sense of them. It's also hands-on. And you're trying to figure something out with great people, so it's fun.”

– John Donkersloot '11

John Donkersloot appreciates that Hope enables him to pursue multiple interests fully. A chemistry major, he enjoys the discovery and variety that accompany conducting original research (he is pictured in the laboratory of Dr. Mike Pikaart earlier this summer). This spring he won the bronze medal in the high jump at the NCAA Division III track and field championships, and became the third All-American high jumper in Hope's history. A gifted pianist, he has already been featured in a variety of venues at Hope, including as a soloist during the all-department Musical Showcase presented at DeVos Hall in Grand Rapids in the spring.

an organism called Giardia lamblia in order to learn more about how it modifies and expresses different genes. Under the supervision of Dr. Pikaart, he is conducting original research funded by a Beckman Award, Hope's most prestigious internally-given science honor. The award is sponsored by the Arnold and Mabel Beckman Foundation to recognize undergraduate excellence in the sciences. It is supporting Donkersloot's research throughout this summer, the upcoming academic year, and the summer of 2010.

Donkersloot enjoys the discovery and variety that accompany the work. On any given day, he might run a gel test, culture and analyze giardia proteins, or develop a new experiment to compare the organism's chemical language to that of other cells with DNA-packed nuclei.

“Research is great. It's logical—you can look at your results and make sense of them. It's also hands-on. And you're trying to figure something out with great people,” he explained, “so it's fun.”

Dr. Pikaart believes that Donkersloot is an excellent collaborative partner because he sustains an irrepressible curiosity and couples it with a strong dedication to the task at hand. “John does things 100 percent. Regardless of the subject, he wants to know all there is to know about it and then some,” he said.

Donkersloot's curiosity and self-driven approach aren't exclusive to the lab. As a pianist, he has earned a spot in Hope's Concerto/Aria competition, performed as a soloist in various concerts (including the annual DeVos Musical Showcase), and was chosen to participate in a master class with Russian pianist Yuri Rozum. Despite the accolades, however, he is not majoring or minoring in piano performance. Instead, he meets with Dr. Andrew Le, assistant professor of music, for lessons to help him improve what he calls “my big, big hobby.”

Dr. Le stopped assigning music after his first year, and Donkersloot now proposes the pieces he finds intriguing. As a sophomore, he explored work by Sergei Rachmaninoff, whose long lines and unique harmonies caught his ear. This year he'd like to learn Schubert's C-minor Sonata and Beethoven's C-minor Variations. With each piece, he practices for the moment when the notes flow from the piano perfectly, unhindered by error or over-eagerness.

“When you get that tough passage right after playing it slowly so many times, all you can think is, ‘Yes! Yes!’ and let it fly,” he explained. “It's a great feeling.”

Donkersloot is delighted when he experiences the same feeling in the chemistry lab—“A lot of the time, things go wrong, so it's great when they go right”—and when practicing for the high jump, an event in which recently he was named an All-American.

“I love the accomplishment you feel when you clear a height or have a good jump,” he said. “That's what makes it worth it. You do all that training for one split second.”

He is willing to practice for the privilege of experiencing the perfect lab test, sonata, or high jump, and when he considers his first two years at Hope College, he finds himself looking back on numerous people who encouraged him to set his educational course by those ideals.

“It's a very self-directed thing here at Hope,” he said. “At this level, with these great people, I think that's how it should be.”

Donkersloot says that he inherited his own work ethic from his dad, and believes that good work is never done in vain. “Sometimes it feels like it is, but if you're there, putting forth effort and doing the right thing, you shouldn't be surprised when you eventually do well.”

Musing on his next two years—and the years after that—he sees that Hope has helped prepare him for the future he might imagine for himself. He plans to play the piano for life. He can funnel his tenacious curiosity into multiple outlets. His interest in medicine has expanded to include a fascination with chemistry, and his growing research experience will make him an excellent candidate for dual M.D./Ph.D. programs.

Yet Donkersloot is keen to show up for the present moment, take ownership of it, and wait for it to yield something.

“I've always known that this is my life, and it's going to be what I make of it,” he said. “My parents and professors have laid the foundation—now I have to put in the work.”

Rooted in Tradition

Service is a major focus for the college's fraternities and sororities today—and is an emphasis that, like the groups themselves, has a rich tradition. In the photo above (from the mid 1960s or earlier based on the style), members of the

for our students," the 1916 Catalog explained.

As the 20th century progressed, however, the Hope groups became fraternities and sororities in the more commonly understood sense, although very much grounded in their origins and each with their own distinctive

"I have formed great relationships and made wonderful friends. I've become a part of something rooted in tradition that is so much bigger than just me. My individual organization and Greek Life as a whole have allowed me to fill various leadership roles [that] have taught me invaluable lessons. Also I've been given opportunities for service to Hope and the Holland community that I otherwise would not have had."

– Julie Reishus '10, Dorian

As he anticipated his freshman year, Greg Lam '88 vowed that he would never join a fraternity.

Things happen. With an overflow of incoming students that fall and housing tight, Hope put him into the on-campus house of the Knickerbocker fraternity. By the end of the year, he was a proud KHN active, and he's never regretted it, finding himself shaped by friendships that have lasted a lifetime.

"My association with the Knickerbocker fraternity was invaluable," said Lam, who is a lead grant writer with Viability, a company that helps businesses receive grants and tax savings for new buildings and renovations that produce energy savings. "I would not be who

I am today without being a part of this group. They were my mentors. They challenged me. They would let me get away with nothing and sometimes made me risk everything."

"I've made so many lasting friendships with people who now live all over the world," he said. "I can honestly say that I still regularly visit at least 20 of my fraternity brothers."

The Knicks are one of two fraternities celebrating milestone anniversaries this year, marking their 100th with a three-day reunion running Friday-Sunday, Sept. 18-20. The Fraternal Society will be commemorating its 175th during Homecoming Weekend, Friday-Sunday, Oct. 9-11. Looking just a bit farther ahead, the Delta Phi sorority is anticipating its 100th anniversary in 2010.

Hope has 14 fraternities and sororities, 12 local and two chapters of national organizations. About 400 of the college's 3,200 students are members, a figure that will climb to about 550 after spring new member activation.

It's a convenient parallel in this anniversary year that both Hope's first president and current president were Fraters. The Fraternal Society actually predates Hope—it was established at Union College in 1834 and brought to Hope by President Philip Phelps, who was a Union alumnus, in 1864. President James Bultman '63 joined Fraternal as a freshman in the fall of 1960.

Even as the organizations have forged enduring traditions, however, they have evolved with the times.

The groups were initially "literary societies," reflecting devotion to scholarly inquiry that included socializing but pointedly avoided Greek identity. In those early days, Hope wanted to keep its organizations local, the better to match what was already envisioned as a holistic educational experience. "In our opinion, fraternities and chapter houses do not lend to such mode of living as we desire meaningful part of a Hope education. Clearly, the actives feel that it is, from friendships formed, to leadership learned, to opportunities to give and grow through service.

"Service is definitely a major focus of Greek organizations at Hope," said senior Julie Reishus of Naperville, Ill., a Dorian. "Most organizations' creeds highlight service as a value the members hold and a practice carried out through various efforts throughout the year. Dance Marathon and Relay for Life are two big events that Greeks contribute to consistently, each organization also has its own individual projects/causes, and Greeks continually have a strong presence at events or for causes sponsored by other campus organizations like Volunteer Services."

"I have gained so much from Greek Life. It has given me opportunities that otherwise I would not have been given," said sophomore Devin Berghorst of Hamilton, Mich., an Emersonian. "Through Greek Life at Hope, I have become a part of the InterFraternity Council, Relay for Life, Dance Marathon, SAC and many other things. I have also met so many people that I would have never met if I wasn't in Greek Life. Greek Life does a great job of bringing together people of all different backgrounds and ages."

As the range of campus activities has broadened, so, too, has the college's perspective on national Greek organizations, and so students in 2003 and 2005 respectively established chapters of the Phi Sigma Kappa fraternity and the Delta Sigma Theta sorority. Tonisha Gordon '09 joined the sorority, which had been founded in 1913 at Howard University, as a freshman. "I really liked what it stood for—service focus, and it's all about the sisterhood," said Gordon, who's going on to graduate school at the University of Pennsylvania. "I know that a lot of sororities are like that, but I really felt the bond with Delta Sigma Theta."

Although he hadn't planned to join a fraternity, qualities that senior Austin Sonneveldt of Traverse City, Mich., saw in Fraters he met while on the hockey team showed him that the group had much to offer. He's found an organization that supports him in his studies ("Without having that influence on me, I can honestly say that I wouldn't have done as well as I've done") while also helping him balance his academic work with other commitments and interests. He's especially valued the leadership lessons he's learned.

"You automatically meet a lot of the seniors, and as an underclassman it's meaningful to see them at the height of their college career and the way that they conduct themselves," he said.

"Through Greek Life at Hope, I have become a part of the InterFraternity Council, Relay for Life, Dance Marathon, SAC and many other things. I have also met so many people that I would have never met if I wasn't in Greek Life."

– Devin Berghorst '11, Emersonian

Knick alumnus Wayne Fieldhouse '51, who is retired from a career with the YMCA, appreciates the lessons to be learned through fraternity and sorority membership, and believes that alumni, connected in brotherhood and sisterhood, can themselves play a role as a resource for new generations. He's worked with the current Knicks in volunteering at Holland's DeGraaf Nature Center, and led a Sunday afternoon reading group focused on the book Uncommon: Finding Your Path to Significance by retired Indianapolis Colts coach Tony Dungy.

"We ought to be looking at these groups from the outside, from our perspective, as an experience for young people to grow, to develop," he said.

"There are some people out there who have done some great things," he said. "They could offer experiences. They could offer connections that they have. It's like a reservoir out there."

Formed at Union College in 1834 and brought to Hope in the 1860s by Philip Phelps, the Fraternal Society is the oldest Greek organization on campus and among the oldest in the U.S. The Fraters are holding a 175-year reunion during Homecoming in October.

Living Lessons

By Greg Chandler

Ellen Tanis '90 Awad doesn't look at activities and organizations, such as the Student Congress and Greek life, as a separate part of a student's experience during his or her time at Hope.

Ellen Tanis '90 Awad plays an active role in campus life through her work in Student Development. Here she places one of the measuring marks on the rope at the beginning of the annual freshman-sophomore Pull tug-of-war.

Awad, who is director of student life and associate director of the college's Center for Faithful Leadership, instead considers them an integral part of the educational process, one that can help determine a student's future direction. She was excited when Hope changed the name of her department last academic year to the Department of Student Life.

"It's a philosophical change," Awad said. "It's not just about the activities, although we want great activities planned for our students. We're more about the actual experience that you're having through your leadership role, through membership in an organization, how you're developing your skills, and contributing (to the Hope community)."

In her role, Awad oversees about 70 campus organizations, ranging from the Anchor student newspaper to the annual student-organized Dance Marathon benefit for Helen DeVos Children's Hospital in Grand Rapids, Mich.

"I love meeting students, finding out who they are, where they think they're going, and walking alongside them in their journey at Hope," she said. "I really enjoy fostering a sense of community and helping people figure out what they're meant to do."

One area in which Awad is actively involved is encouraging leadership skills among Hope students. Last year, the Office of Student Life launched a pilot program in which 18 students who were identified as emerging campus leaders were invited to take part in a five-week program on leadership development.

"They learned about themselves, they learned about working with others, they learned about diversity," Awad said.

The program went over so well that the Office of Student Life plans to offer the program twice during the 2009-10 academic year – once in the fall and once in the spring.

With the new school year only weeks away, Ellen Tanis '90 Awad works with seniors Caitlin Gardner and Jennifer Johnston, who are co-directors of this year's New Student Orientation for the members of the incoming Class of 2013. The four-day program will of course help the new students as they settle in at Hope, but it is also a learning and leadership experience for the approximately 200 upperclassmen who plan and run it.

The office also started a "Lunch and Learn" series that will continue during the new academic year, Awad said.

Awad knows well the value of being actively involved in various organizations and activities as a Hope student. As an undergraduate with psychology-sociology composite and sociology majors, she was a resident hall assistant her sophomore and junior years, then served as an assistant resident hall director in Kollen Hall as a senior.

In addition, Awad was involved in the Nykerk Cup competition, then became a Nykerk coach for the play portion of the competition. She also served on the Panhellenic Council, which consists of representatives from Greek organizations on Hope campus and was a disc jockey at WTHS-FM – "back when we spun vinyl," she says with a laugh.

"It gave me a great foundation, because I was an involved student," Awad said. "I know how it can really enrich and enhance your college experience, how it can help you develop leadership skills, how it can help you figure out how to work with people and in group situations."

While Awad was uncertain about her career direction as an undergraduate, it was through her undergraduate activities that she developed relationships with people in Hope's Student Development office. They took an interest in helping her to identify and develop her talents.

"They said, 'Ellen, you should really think about going into student affairs, and you should think about going back to grad school so you can do this,'" Awad said.

She appreciated both the mentoring and the advice. She enrolled in graduate school at the University of Georgia, where she earned a master's degree in college student personnel in 1993.

She worked in residence life at Michigan State University for two years after earning her master's, and then in 1995 had the opportunity to come back to Hope. She was a resident director at the college for the next four years, two in Kollen Hall and two in Cook Hall.

Awad next worked for one year as director of student housing at Augustana College in Sioux Falls, S.D., but found she missed the day-to-day contact with students. "It was much more administrative than I realized," she said.

She returned to Hope in 2000 as residential life coordinator at Dykstra Hall, a position she held for three years before moving over to student activities.

While some campus organizations have been around since the 1800s, others have emerged much more recently. The mix of groups, in fact, changes regularly, with students themselves often providing the impetus for their creation. New clubs, devoted to such diverse interests as equestrian sports and knitting, have formed in the last several years, Awad said.

Caitlin Gardner, a senior from Alma, Mich., can attest to Awad's passion for students. Gardner got to know Awad through the Dance Marathon program, for which she was an assistant director this past spring, and is now working closely with her as one of the co-directors of Hope's orientation program for incoming students.

"She has just been an inspiration to me," said Gardner, a language arts composite/elementary education major at Hope, who has also been a tutor in the college's Children's After School Achievement (CASA) program and was recently inducted into Mortar Board. "She is so positive and very excited about anything that is going on. She's such an encourager for me and keeps me going."

In addition to her work in student life, Awad also assists Dr. Steve VanderVeen at the college's Center for Faithful Leadership. She is co-facilitator of a class that students take as part of a leadership minor at Hope, where they read various texts and draw connections to their own involvement in campus and community organizations.

Awad has strong family connections to Hope. Her father, Dr. Elliot Tanis, is professor emeritus of mathematics at Hope, and her brothers Phil and Joel are also Hope alumni. Her husband, Habeeb Awad, is international student advisor at Hope's Paul G. Fried International Center and an instructor of Arabic at the college. The two met at a Reformed Church in America camp in New York, where he was working as a lifeguard. The couple have two children, Sophie, 11, and Simon, seven.

Awad says Hope's strong emphasis on student involvement in co-curricular activities ties into the college's mission of providing a liberal arts education in the context of the historic Christian faith.

"What I like about the liberal arts, (is that) you're getting this broad-based education, and we can be that co-curricular base that contributes into that overall Hope experience, instead of being 'this is the fun thing we get to do on the weekends,'" she said. "I feel like we're helping to develop and educate students in a way that complements what happens in the classroom." 🐦

Hope College will celebrate 100 years of playing football during the 2009 season. The celebration will be highlighted Homecoming Weekend (Oct. 9-10) with a reunion of football alumni hosted the H-Club.

One of the unique settings for a Hope football game occurred in 1972 when more than 1,000 fans "crowded" into the 100,000-seat Soldier Field in Chicago to cheer a 32-14 victory over the University of Illinois-Chicago Circle.

While there were signs of attempts to introduce football to the Hope landscape as early as the 1890s, it wasn't until 1902 that a score was recorded, albeit a 36-0 loss to a high school team! The first recorded game against a collegiate opponent was a 1908 loss to Benton Harbor College, 19-15. Enjoy other historic moments and notable performances at www.hope.edu/pr/athletics/fb/100years.html.

Perhaps college football's first "domed" stadium was Holland's Riverview Park, home of the Flying Dutchmen from 1932 through 1978. Fans on the home side of the field were protected by a covered grandstand that had been relocated from the county fairgrounds.

According to historian and athletics director emeritus Gordon Brewer, in the annals of Hope football, no game shines brighter than the one played on October 25, 1958 when coach Russ DeVette's underdog Flying Dutchmen defeated national power Hillsdale 16-13 to end the Dales' 28-game MIAA winning streak. The final gun sounded between center Gene Van Dongen's snap and Bill Huijbregtse's 39-yard kick. Because there is no photographic record of the feat, the kick was reenacted days later for the benefit of photographers. Read more about this game at www.hope.edu/pr/athletics/fb/100years.html.

Rivalry games are a big part of collegiate football tradition, and there is none bigger at the small-college level than the "Wooden Shoes Rivalry" between Hope and Kalamazoo. A pair of hand-carved wooden shoes has been the travelling trophy in this rivalry since 1931. The teams meet for the 89th time this fall.

Over a coaching career of 25 seasons, Ray Smith guided the Flying Dutchmen to a record nine MIAA championships and their first-ever appearances in the NCAA playoffs. He's pictured with all-league quarterback and Academic All-American Mark Spencer during the 1979 championship season.

Hope football players have taken to the gridiron nearly 800 times over the past 99 seasons. The milestone 400th victory was celebrated in 2007 by coach Dean Kreps and his MIAA championship team. Football alumni have been invited to share a memorable gridiron moment. They will be published in a commemorative booklet in conjunction with the upcoming Homecoming celebration. (highlights can be found at www.hope.edu/pr/athletics/fb/100years.html)

Amazingly, the list of Hope's head football coaches is short with just six men holding the position since 1917! The teacher-coach model Hope embodies was perhaps best exemplified in Professor Alvin W. Vanderbush, a member of the political science faculty and coach of the Flying Dutchmen during the team's revival years (1945-54). Hope's first outright MIAA championship was accomplished in 1953 with a roster of just 39 players. This year's pre-season roster numbers nearly 130 players. Attention to Detail

A campus icon is returning better than ever with the start of the new school year. Venerable Graves Hall is reopening later this month after a year-long, $5.7 million, adaptive restoration that has emphasized a return to the building's original character while updating the 19th-century landmark for use in the 21st.

Dedicated in 1894, Graves was constructed as the college's chapel and library, but ceased serving as first one and then the other when Dimnent Memorial Chapel and Van Zoeren Library opened in 1929 and 1961 respectively. Renovations in 1962 and 1980 reconfigured the building for new use, but at the expense of much of its beauty.

In both updating and restoring the historic structure, the latest work has been informed by original blueprints as well as photographs and even living memory. Remade are the distinctive art-glass windows that were once a fixture in Winants Auditorium, a connection to the space's original use as Hope's chapel but removed in 1980 due to their deterioration. As when the building opened in 1894, the second floor features four large classrooms, the varnished wooden doors and wainscoting newly installed but suggesting the classic elegance of a bygone era. The main staircase, isolated behind metal doors in the 1962 redo, again greets visitors to the main lobby. As prior to the restoration, the ground floor of the building will continue to house the Upward Bound and Children's After School Achievement (CASA) programs, as well as the Schoon Meditation Chapel, all in improved space.

A major new addition—built of stone to match the rest of the building and facing the Pine Grove—includes an elevator that provides access for the first time to the top and ground floors for those with mobility impairments. Other features where the library stacks once stood include an additional classroom and the "Presidents' Room" conference room featuring portraits of all of Hope's presidents. Additional amenities undreamed-of when the structure was built include wireless Internet service and wiring throughout for access to the complete array of technologies that exist in support of education. And air conditioning. 🦋

(Editor's Note: There will be a dedication and open houses during Homecoming Weekend, Oct. 9-11. More about the project, including a gallery of photos chronicling the construction, is online.)

From the Heart

Through their journey to South Africa to share the gift of music, the members of the Chapel Choir in turn received in ways that reach beyond their participation in the ensemble.

The choir visited communities including Cape Town, Johannesburg, Soweto and Stellenbosch, with performances at churches, high schools, an AIDS clinic and an inner-city ministry, and with the Stellenbosch University Choir.

Differences of culture and context faded quickly as guests and hosts alike found common cause through their mutual love of music and an eagerness to learn from and give to one another. And through the connections that happened along the way and in between, the students gained insights into themselves and their own hopes for the future in ways that were transformational, as travel and education always in the best are. 📖

"The Chapel Choir trip to South Africa exceeded my expectations in every way. I never expected to feel such intense acceptance and a sense of community with the people of S.A. The chances we had to sing for students in the schools and in the orphanages really impacted me as a future educator and only made me more excited about bringing my knowledge of music to young children."

"I will never forget the lessons South Africa and my experiences there taught me about life, God, culture, language, ubuntu, community, and hope. I can't imagine what my Hope experience would have been like without this choir, this music, these people. What a way to end a four-year saga of the best times of my life to date!"

"On almost a daily basis, no matter where we were, whether a school, a church, a concert hall or a homeless shelter, if one person were to stand and begin singing a hymn or a folk tune, every single person in the room would stand and join, regardless of race, native tongue or religious background. The sound was often overpowering as these people raised their voices together in song. All of us were amazed at this, and we long to bring this sense of unity and community pride back to our neighborhoods, our school and our country."

"I learned so much while in South Africa. I became much more thankful for all that we are blessed with. My eyes were opened to what hope really means, I learned the importance of family and community, I saw the power of music and its unifying elements, and I stood in awe of the welcoming environments we experienced all around this beautiful country!"

"One particular experience that stuck out for me was when we visited a bed and breakfast in one of the shantytowns in Cape Town. Many of the houses were made of various scraps of metal, wood, rubber or glass, and looked as if they could fall down at any moment. The woman who ran the B&B told us as she held her daughter close, 'Please feel free to walk around and take a look. Make this feel like your home. Take as many pictures as you like. We are not ashamed of how we live—please do not feel sorry for us.' I was extremely touched by this woman's comments and felt sudden pity, not for her, but for me. What a huge lesson I learned from this experience."

Turning Rehab into Wii-hab

Sometimes, something can be both good for you and fun.

Dr. Kirk Brumels '88 of the Hope athletic training staff had an intuitive sense and a fair bit of anecdotal evidence that popular activity-based video games like Dance Dance Revolution and the Wii Fit Balance Board programs could play a positive role in helping athletes with balance rehabilitation, but he hadn't located any hard data to support the notion.

So, this past fall he and a team of student researchers tackled the topic themselves. They conducted a study, published in the winter 2008 edition of Clinical Kinesiology, that found that such games offered the best of both worlds: they were more effective than traditional rehabilitation tools and the athletes enjoyed them more.

Ironically—or, rather, perhaps because the athletes were enjoying using the activities—participants in the study also believed that the games were less difficult than the traditional tools even as they were more effective.

"They perceived it as easier, yet the data suggested that it was as effective as, if not more effective than, the other exercises," said Dr. Brumels, who is an associate professor of kinesiology, program director of the athletic training education program and an assistant athletic trainer.

"I think it provides an energy to rehab. It makes it easier to go to—not necessarily that the task is easier, but it makes it easier to go to rehab."

— junior Sophie Hartman

Dr. Brumels was inspired to start using the games a few years ago, when his daughter showed him her new Dance Dance Revolution game. "I thought, 'Oh, my, this has a ton of applications in the athletic training world and rehabilitation,'" he said. The college's athletic training program began using the newly designed Wii system more recently.

Football player David DeBoer '10 of Grosse Pointe, Mich., demonstrates the way that Wii games and Dance Dance Revolution can be used in helping athletes as they rehabilitate injuries.

He recognizes that the video game balance programs—such as Ski Slalom, Table Tilt and Balance Bubble—are much more interesting than the traditional balance exercise programs, which involve standing on a variety of stable and unstable surfaces, maybe interacting with a ball or other object, in the training room.

Junior Sophie Hartman of Plainwell, Mich., has appreciated the system as she has been rehabilitating her ankle following an injury sustained during this past soccer season.

"Working with other athletes that are rehabilitating as well, it provides a fun competition," said Hartman, who is herself an athletic training major.

"I think it provides an energy to rehab," she said. "It makes it easier to go to—not necessarily that the task is easier, but it makes it easier to go to rehab."

"We've had incredible compliance with the athletes on it," Dr. Brumels said. "As long as it's fun, and they're doing it and it's beneficial to them, that's what we want."

The four-week Hope study involved 25 athletes who were asked to rate their experience with the three systems between one and five according to difficulty, engagement and enjoyability. While the traditional methods earned a relatively low 2.17 for enjoyability and a 3.33 for engagement, Dance Dance Revolution earned 4.14 in both categories and Wii Fit earned 4.40 in each. The traditional methods rated 3.17 out of five for difficulty, while Dance Dance Revolution and Wii Fit weighed in as easier at 2.71 and 1.60.

Especially significant to Dr. Brumels was the finding that the athletes who had used Dance Dance Revolution and Wii Fit showed greater improvement in balance as measured by force plate testing following their month-long rehabilitation experience. It was an added bonus that the exercises were perceived as easier and more enjoyable by the participants.

Even as the participants in the study worked on their balance through the various rehabilitation methods, other students learned through the research process itself. Dr. Brumels conducted the study and co-authored the paper during the recent fall semester with four Hope senior athletic training or exercise science majors: Troy Blasius, Tyler Cortright, Daniel Oumedian and Brent Solberg. "They were intimately involved in the literature review, the study design, the implementation of it, and the data collection and analysis," he said. 🙌

JOURNAL ADVISOR: Dr. Thomas Bultman '78, who is a professor of biology and chairperson of the department, has been appointed to a three-year term on the Board of Advisors to the Editors of New Phytologist, an international scholarly journal focused on plant science.

Established in 1902, New Phytologist offers publication of high-quality, original plant-science research within four sections: physiology and development, environment, interaction and evolution. The monthly journal is owned by the New Phytologist Trust, a not-for-profit organization that is dedicated to the promotion of plant science.

MEMOIR ON ABUSE: A memoir by Kim Douglas of the English faculty is geared toward helping others break the cycle of family violence that marked her own life growing up.

Douglas, who is an adjunct assistant professor of English, is the author of High Desert: A Journey of Survival and Hope, published in May by Baha'i Publishing. In the memoir, she reveals her childhood experiences in an abusive home and shares her journey to healing, hoping that her story will make a difference to others who have endured similar circumstances.

Therapist and nutritionist Dr. Marla Friedman has said, "This beautiful book by Kim Douglas is a touching, poignant story that is exquisitely sensitive and powerfully insightful. It is a story about enduring abuse, survival, healing through adversity, the resilience of the human spirit and hope. I am recommending this book to all my patients, colleagues and all those who care about in-depth healing."

NASA PROJECT: Physics researchers at Hope are participating in a NASA-funded collaborative project that is linking multiple teams in an international effort that could result in a giant leap in mankind's understanding of a type of star.

Dr. Peter Gonthier, who is a professor of physics, and his student researchers are part of a NASA-based project that has been seeking to better understand how pulsars, which are highly compact collapsed stars, produce high-energy gamma rays. The team's project, "Particle Acceleration and High Energy Radiation from Pulsar Magnetospheres," has recently received a three-year, $459,043 grant--$76,866 of which is supporting work at Hope—from the NASA Astrophysics Theory Program.

The latest round of support follows an earlier three-year award to the project from the NASA Astrophysics Theory Program.

With this issue celebrating Greek life at Hope, I've enjoyed having an opportunity to reflect on my own time as a student. I was a member of the Sibylline sorority and absolutely loved it. Most of my closest friends were members of the Greek system; although not all of them were Sibbs. I found leadership opportunities in the sorority; serving in roles that allowed me to work closely with other organizations. My sorority experience significantly shaped my Hope experience. I can't think of my time at Hope without thinking about the sorority.

As the alumni director, I enjoy talking to alumni who graduated 50-, 60-plus years ago about their sorority and fraternity experiences. They still refer to each other as brothers and sisters, and each organization seems to have maintained its personality over the years. The appreciation for the bonds formed years ago is often present and forefront in alumni's experiences. This fall's major celebrations for the Fraters and Knicks reflect the importance of Greek life in the history of the college.

At the same time, I have also seen a big change in Greek life even from when I was a student. The social component remains, but there is an even greater focus on community service, giving back, and making a positive impact at Hope and the Holland community. I have found, too, that the Greeks are very interested in connecting with their alumni, hoping to communicate and find opportunities to learn from and network with them. I have been impressed with the students with whom I have worked these past few years and have found the Greeks a vibrant and exciting group with which to be involved.

I expect this fall to be quite a celebration. The Knicks commemorate 100 years in September and the Fraters their 175th during Homecoming. The Sigma Sigma sorority recently celebrated its 100th, and next year the Delphis turn 100. It's exciting – Hope wouldn't be Hope without the Greeks, and each time we get to celebrate a major anniversary we also get to celebrate that shared history.

Window to Hope's History

Reflecting the longstanding ties between Hope and the college's parent denomination, the General Synod of the Reformed Church in America met on campus and at neighboring Western Theological Seminary on Thursday-Tuesday, June 4-9. The General Synod has convened on the Hope campus multiple times through the years, including last year. The first visit to campus by the group was in 1884, during the Synod's first meeting in "The West," held in Grand Rapids, Mich. On Saturday, June 7, 1884, the delegates took a day excursion to see Hope. They listened to the choir and students sing, heard some remarks, toured campus, had a meal, sailed on the lake and—as shown above—had their photo taken with their Hope hosts.

H. Sidney Heersma '30 of Kalamazoo, Mich., celebrated his 100th birthday on Saturday, July 11. He was the first pediatrician in Kalamazoo, where he practiced medicine from 1937 until he retired in 1998. He continues to live in his own home and keeps active by walking.

Changes Set for 2010 Reunions

To avoid overlap with Holland's signature community event, the college has shifted Alumni Weekend a week earlier than originally announced. Independent of the change, the Office of Alumni and Parent Relations is also adjusting the reunion cycle a bit.

The spring reunions will run Friday-Sunday, April 30-May 2. The college's Baccalaureate and Commencement will be held as originally scheduled, on Sunday, May 9.

Alumni Weekend and graduation have traditionally been held on the same weekend, but the Office of Alumni and Parent Relations has shifted the reunions because Saturday, May 8, which would have been Alumni Day, is the culminating date of the 2010 Tulip Time Festival. Hundreds of thousands of visitors will be in Holland for the May 8 Tulip Time events, which will include a parade through downtown Holland.

During the April 30-May 2 Alumni Weekend, Hope will be holding reunions for every fifth class from 1960 to 1980. Instead of having separate reunions for earlier classes, all alumni from 1960 and prior will have the opportunity to attend a 50-Year Circle luncheon and ceremony on Saturday, May 1.

Beginning in the fall of 2010, the 25-year reunion will move to Homecoming Weekend, which already hosts the five-, 10-, 15- and 20-year reunions. This coming fall's Homecoming, which runs Friday-Sunday, Oct. 9-11, will feature reunions for the classes of 1989, 1994, 1999 and 2004. Homecoming in the fall of 2010 will feature reunions for every fifth class, 1985 – 2005.

"Hope has many traditions. I've been fortunate to be part of one of those as a member of the football team. One of the best things about Hope's football program is that although we work hard, football doesn't consume our lives. We know we are receiving an excellent education and can participate in other activities, as well as be on a good team with a great tradition of winning championships. Our coaches push us both on and off the field to excel as student athletes and it's evident they care about us for more than just our athletic abilities."

Cancer Claims Karen Page

Karen Page, a leader in the advancement of tennis at the high school, college and community levels, died Friday, July 3, 2009, at the Hospice House in Holland following a long, courageous battle against cancer.

Page, 60, most recently was serving as director of the college's DeWitt Tennis Center and coached the women's tennis team the past 12 years.

"She was a very special lady, so enthusiastic, so energetic," longtime colleague Dwayne "Tiger" Teusink '58 told The Holland Sentinel. "She motivated everyone around her. She promoted loyalty and respect with her players. She was a role model."

"Positive energy and spirit were the hallmarks of Karen Page's life. Every woman she coached, every person she touched was the beneficiary of her strong touchstones of enthusiasm and passion, not just for the game of tennis but for the joy of life," said Eva Dean '83 Folkert, co-director of athletics at Hope. "I honestly can't remember a time when in the space of five minutes — whether in competition or conversation, I did not see a smile come across KP's face. We will greatly miss such a terrific role model to students and women. We will greatly miss such a treasured coach and friend."

Page guided the Hope Flying Dutch to conference championships in the Michigan Intercollegiate Athletic Association (MIAA) in 1998, 1999, 2000 and 2009. The 1998, 2000 and 2009 Flying Dutch earned a berth in the NCAA tournament. Although a recurrence of cancer this spring did not allow her to actively coach the team, it also did not deter her from being with her squad at the conference and NCAA tournaments.

Page had an extensive background as a teacher and coach of tennis. She previously served as coach of the boys' and girls' varsity teams at Holland West Ottawa High School. She also coached the Holland community's adult women USTA travel teams.

She served as president of the Michigan High School Tennis Coaches Association and was a certified tennis teaching professional.

She was presented the distinguished service award by the Western Michigan Tennis Association for outstanding leadership and service and named to the Hall of Fame of the Michigan High School Tennis Coaches Association. She was a graduate of Iowa State University.

Survivors include her husband, Tom Page '72; a twin sister, Karyl Garbo (Jack Whitley) of Phoenix, Ariz.; and a brother, Tim, of Montana.

A memorial service was held in Dimnent Memorial Chapel on Sunday, July 5, and led by the Rev. Paul Boersma '82, who is the Leonard and Marjorie Maas Endowed Senior Chaplain at Hope.

Survivors include Morgan's parents, Stephen '84 (Jacqueline VanHeest '85) Kacmar. Jacqueline is accounting manager in the business services offices at Hope.

Shepherding the Boughs

Since the beginning of Hope, the Pine Grove at the heart of campus has been a tranquil refuge, a place to study, to reflect, to pray, to play. In the Great Holland Fire of 1871 it was a haven more literally, as members of the community fled to the college to escape as flames devoured the town surrounding. While the copse's forebears sprang untended from the soil primeval before ever Holland's and Hope's founders arrived, today the little wood receives devoted care, a commitment to preserving the beloved space not only for the present but for future generations, and a reflection of the grove's centrality in regard as well as geography.
